Though more than 30 years have passed since legendary Notre Dame guard Austin Carr played his final game in an Irish uniform, he still remains the school's all-time leading scorer with 2,560 points from 1968-71. Carr earned national player of the year honors as a senior in 1970-71 from both the Associated Press and United Press International.

He still ranks as the most prolific scorer in the history of the NCAA basketball tournament with a 41.3-point average in seven NCAA games. His NCAA tournament single-game record of 61 points versus Ohio University in 1970 also still stands. In addition, Carr has posted three of the top five scoring performances in tournament history while still holding six NCAA tournament marks.

A three-year starter at guard, the Washington, D.C. product and Mackin High School standout averaged 22.0 points for the Irish as a sophomore, 38.1 as a junior and 37.9 as a senior, helping the Irish to NCAA tournament appearances each of those seasons. Carr finished second nationally in scoring as both a junior and senior and his career 34.6 scoring mark ranks second all-time.

The first player chosen by the Cavaliers in the 1971 National Basketball Association draft, Carr made the NBA all-rookie team in '72. He finished with 10,473 career points, playing 11 seasons.

A '71 Notre Dame graduate in economics, Carr currently is the director of business and community development for the Cleveland Cavaliers.

Notes: Had 22 double doubles in his career as a guard...had double figures in made field goals in 55 of his last 58 games over two years...played exactly 29 games each of his last two years, his season total was just five total points different (1106 as junior, 1101 as senior) in those two seasons...had at least 20 points in every game his junior and senior year, 58 in a row...had two games in his 74-game career in which he failed to score in double figures, the Feb. 11, 1969, game was the first game back after suffering a broken foot in practice in early January, the other was the NCAA Tournament game of March 8 when he re-broke the foot in the game against Miami (OH)...had at least 20 points in 70 of his 74 Notre Dame games.

When the wrecking ball swung into memory-laden old Notre Dame Fieldhouse on March 12, 1983, basketball-crazy Irish alumni winced at the blow.

“Like a good friend, you hate to see the passing of it,” said Dick Rosenthal, former Notre Dame athletic director and a former Irish captain who played on squads that were 26-3 in the building labeled “The Snakepit” by opposing coaches.

For 63 seasons, before the opening of the Joyce Center in 1968, the fieldhouse was an almost insurmountable opponent even before the Irish stepped on the floor.

Lined from floor to rafters with raucous, rowdy and, above all, vocal Notre Dame students, the old building provided the home team with 474 victories and gave up-grudgingly - just 91 defeats.

“The coaches used to fear coming in here. It was impossible,” said Ed “Moose” Krause, the former Notre Dame athletic director who, as an Irish scoring star and coach from the '30s to the '50s, was 66-12 in the fieldhouse.

“If you happened to have on a Notre Dame uniform, you found the crowd warm and friendly,” said Rosenthal.

“But if you happened to be wearing anything but white or gold, it didn't seem so friendly. When they say ‘The blood was on the bricks,’ it was more of a reality than a euphemism.”

The original fieldhouse was finished in 1898. It burned nearly to the ground two years later, but Notre Dame legend has it that the Rev. Andrew Morrissey, then University president, called a meeting to discuss building a fireproof replacement even before the embers stopped smouldering. It was completed within months.

Early in the century, basketball was played on a clay court that had to be rolled and watered daily, but in 1925 – using the proceeds from the 1925 Rose Bowl, the final appearance together of the fabled Four Horsemen – the university built an addition with a wooden basketball floor.

“You could shoehorn 5,000 to 6,000 people in there,” said Rosenthal, a 1954 graduate. “Spectators started virtually two feet out from courtside and completely surrounded the place. About 80 or 90 percent of them were students, who were always a bit partisan. We found it a very attractive place to play.”

Legendary Kentucky coach Adolph Rupp didn't find it terribly attractive; Krause remembers Rupp was incensed after a 1948 game there, when the Irish scored a 64-55 upset of a Wildcat team that went on to earn a 36-3 record, a collegiate championship and an Olympic gold medal.

“I was coaching at the time,” said Krause. “Rupp said there was no way you can win at Notre Dame. He said the band was right behind him and he couldn't hear the whistle blow, and he couldn't even talk to his players. Right across the way, he said, were 300 black robes – the priests. He said it was impossible.”

Rupp swore never to return to the fieldhouse, and kept his word. The Wildcats avoided South Bend until December of '82, when they visited the Joyce Center, an extremely noisy gym that University old-timers say suffers by comparison with the decibel level in the fieldhouse.

When the Joyce Center was finished, Krause, still in the athletic director's chair, wanted to use the fieldhouse for intramurals. But Notre Dame administrators were determined to tear down the aging building, until the art department persuaded them it needed a headquarters.

The building- one that hosted legendary basketball games, Knute Rockne football rallies, speeches by Franklin Roosevelt and performances by Bob Hope - lived out its last 14 useful years as a studio for ceramics, sculpture and other art forms.

But in the fall of '82, the art department moved to a new home on campus, and the order for execution of the fieldhouse's long-postponed death sentence was issued.

“A fieldhouse is essentially walls and a roof,” said Notre Dame physical plant director Don Dedrick.

“All the wall structures and roof structures were beyond economical restoration. It would be far cheaper to build a new one than to restore this one.”

A new building won't be built – the university has installed a landscaped mall in the spot – but the fieldhouse didn't disappear completely.

The basketball floor was sawed into 1,500 5-inch by 13-inch sections for sale to varsity letterwinners who played and practiced in the building. Any alumnus is eligible to purchase a brick, stamped in inch-high letters with an appropriate slogan.

One of the traditions of Notre Dame basketball has been walk-on players. Sometimes these individuals serve primarily as practice players who, when fortunate, see a few minutes or seconds of time at the end of a game. Others are awarded scholarships during their career, such as Pete Miller, who graduated in 1997, Paul Rainey and Dennis Carroll, who graduated in 1999, and 2000 graduate Skylard Owens. Charles Thomas, a 2002 alumnus, earned a scholarship in the final semester of the 2001-02 campaign. Here's a look at the Notre Dame walk-on records that date back to the 1971-72 season:
